- 1. Prior to Movember 1953, the barracks installation at the northern perimeter of Deuthen (Q 51/Y 58) was occupied by a Polish infantry unit, the soldiers of which were khaki uniforms and red cap bands. Beuthen residents referred to the unit as infantry regiment. Prior to November 1953, numerous officers were continually seen at the former Villa Batschek on the north side of ul. Grottgers Street across from the Barbara Church. Vehicular traffic was light. No sentries were observed during the daytime. There were no military installations on ul. Czarneckiego Street. Sentries in front of military offices had last been observed there in late 1951 or early 1952.
- 2. In mid-1953, a labor unit in the strength of at least 2 companies was observed in the area of Koralnia Rozbark, formerly Heinitz Grube (mine). The unit was quartered in cantonment buildings on the north side of ul. Bernardynska Street. The soldiers of the unit wore red cap tends. In 1953, a labor service unit was also employed in the area of this mine. A third labor unit of about 200 to 250 men was stationed in a cantonment near the former Karsten-Centrum Grube at the western perimeter of the town. The quarters near this mine and those on the south side of ul. Troclauska Street were vacated by troops in May 1953 and, since then, had been used as billets for personnel of the former Karsten-Centrum Grube. In summer 1953, a new building was built there. Source learned that new cantonment buildings had been built at almost all the mines after the summer of 1953.
- 3. Prior to November 1953, the Polish recruiting office in Beuthen was located at the intersection of ul. Korfantego Street and ul. Sokoja Street.

 Registrations for the draft were held in the Konzerthaus (concert hall).

 In September 1953, the registration included members of the 1933 class.
- 4. The address of a military labor unit stationed in Friedland (0 51/G 96) read as follows: Microszow k.Wa/brzych, Jednosc Wojskowa 69/C / progrow-Friedland).
